

Voltron's analysis of Brannon Trial – 9.17.10

Cabbage Boy — why are you not in the court room helping Poor Jim out. He's in trouble. His team is down four touchdowns with less than five minutes to play in the fourth quarter. His starting quarterback (Starr Kelso) has been pummelled and is throwing more interceptions than I can count. His offensive coordinator Larry Spencer is busy looking on the internet for updates on other games while giggling about his fantasy team doing well.

His cheerleaders (Joy Seward) has been kicked out of the game for inappropriate behavior and his defensive coordinator (Dan Gookin) is in the fetal position rocking back and forth sucking his thumb. Apparently, he doesn't like it when the other team scores points.

Middle linebacker Mary Souza is screaming at the umpires to get a call right — unfortunately she's watching a replay of the Boise State-Virginia Tech game on the sidelines. Upstart running back Matt Kelso refuses to go back into the game because of a broken nail.

Nobody can find defensive back Gary Ingram — cause he fell asleep in the locker room at halftime.

Kage Mann is not eligible to play — he's grades are not up to snuff — some professor says he needs to finish a paper.

Erin Jenkins says she can't catch the ball and hold a tape recorder, so she hasn't caught a pass all day.

Head referee Judge Hoscak is contemplating using the “mercy rule” but decides against it because all the kids haven't played yet.

Team Brannon needs you Cabbage Boy!