The Jacklin Arts and Cultural Center is producing its third theatrical performance: The Crucible. The JACC Theater Troup was established in Spring 2012 with the intended purpose of using the unique aspects of The Jacklin Arts and Cultural Center in a theatrical context.

Liisa Spink, the Executive Director, states "When I first came to The JACC, having coming from a theatre background working at the Royal Shakespeare Company, I was immediately struck by the unique features of our building. I want to be able to produce drama that uses this space as an extra character in the play. We are not a typical theater venue, we don't have fly space, we don't have a lighting rig, but what we do have is gorgeous 1890s building that is screaming for site specific productions. So for our third outing as theatrical producers, we chose The Crucible – a beautiful play that focuses on drama, suspense, and hysteria in early America. The religious themes of the play will echo beautifully in our restored church. The director, Jared Helm, is also doing an amazing job of using the entire space to stage the drama. The audience will sit on three sides of the hall – with the action happening in the middle of the hall and on the stage. This will be a truly unique theatrical experience."
