

Condor re: Trump popularity – 2.3.16

There is one thing that Trump does that enamors him to many and alienates himself to just as many. He capitalizes on the fact that among the many rights Americans have, "The Right To Not Be Offended" is not one of them and people are sick and tired of playing make believe that having to adhere to Political Correctness is a law that they must follow. Trump is giving voice to the fact that in fact, there are no such laws.

He gets right in the face of the Self-Anointed, Political Correctness Police and speaks his mind in the words he chooses. When the PC Bullies try to interpret his intent for him and label him this or that, he just laughs and moves on.

People flock to him mainly because here finally, after decades of people cowering in fear and couching their words and hiding their beliefs is a man who says, "no more." He won't be shamed and crucified for his thoughts, words and beliefs ESPECIALLY when they are legal and perfectly in alignment with his rights as an American Citizen.

Even the media seems perplexed by the fact that they can't get to him. They can't gang up on him, can't create his script for him, and can't shut him up and make him go away. They ALWAYS have their way, but it does not appear up to this point that they can get to Trump. Trump is sticking it to the press.

This why he is still around and gathering crowds and support. I'm frankly not wanting to see him elected to the Presidency, but I sure am enjoying seeing someone finally standing up to the PC Bullies and showing all of us that yes, you can say things that might offend someone and not have to be humiliated, belittled and coerced into a false apology or even worse going silent with your own beliefs. The PC Police sure never go silent. Why should those that they attack do so?

It's called the Constitution and last I checked, there is no, "Right Not To Be Offended" and Trump is highlighting that fact.