

These prompts encourage students to deeply reflect on their learning, consider the broader implications of journalism, and connect the lessons to their own lives and communities.

- Prompt:
Reflect on the most surprising or impactful thing you learned about newspapers during this unit. How did it change your understanding of the role that newspapers play in society? Provide specific examples from The Spokesman-Review that influenced your perspective.
- Prompt:
Consider the evolution of newspapers from print to digital formats, such as The Spokesman-Review e-edition. How do you think this shift has affected the way news is consumed and the relationship between newspapers and their communities? What are the advantages and potential drawbacks of this digital transformation?
- Prompt:
Reflect on the ethical responsibilities of journalists. After learning about journalistic ethics and the importance of accurate reporting, how do you think journalists can maintain public trust in today's media landscape? Provide examples from your studies or The Spokesman-Review to support your thoughts.
- Prompt:
Think about the role of newspapers in shaping public opinion and influencing community decisions. How do you see newspapers affecting your own community? Can you think of a recent example from The Spokesman-Review where reporting had a noticeable impact on local events or attitudes?
- Prompt:
Reflect on the process of creating your own news report. What challenges did you encounter in trying to remain objective and factual? How did this experience influence your view of the work journalists do? Do you think you would be interested in pursuing journalism? Why or why not?
- Prompt:
As you look to the future, consider the role of newspapers in a rapidly changing media environment. Do you think newspapers will continue to be relevant in your community? What might they need to do to adapt and thrive in the coming years? Use examples from your experience with The Spokesman-Review to illustrate your points.